Production Engineer Stationing in China – Project management – Continuous improvements

Optimising bottleneck operations and project management

You will be part of the Project Team in the technical department at the production facilities in Qingdao or Dongguan, China. As production engineer your primary tasks will be optimising bottleneck operations and making continuous improvements on existing production lines. Furthermore, the projects could be installing new production lines in close dialogue and co-operation with your colleagues on site and in Denmark.

Besides the above-mentioned tasks and responsibilities you will be managing a team of 2-4 engineers. You will be responsible for motivating and engaging the team in the various projects, which are initiated from your own department as well as from the design or even R&D departments.

Experienced production engineer with a dynamic approach

You have a minimum of 5 years working experience within production engineering and project management. During your career you have worked with serial production and you are used to driving your own projects. You have an international mindset and are open to other cultures though international experience is not a requirement.

As a person you are open to new challenges and know how to achieve your goals. It is important that you have an innovative mindset and that you are structured in your working manner. You have a strong team spirit and rate loyalty highly. Finally you are a self-starter and have a dynamic approach to new tasks.

Challenging job in an international environment

You are offered a challenging and exciting job in a well-established and informal international company facing further growth over the next couple of years. Your area of responsibility will grow accordingly, providing you with good career opportunities. You will be stationed in an international environment with other expatriates and MCI will assist you in every possible way.

If the job is interesting to you, please apply through www.mercuriurval.dk (reference number: DK-464-46214) and upload your application and CV.
